Celebrating Differences

"We are all different, which is great because we are all unique. Without diversity, life would be very boring." — Catherine Pulsifer

In a world that is becoming increasingly interconnected, celebrating differences has never been more crucial. Celebrating differences is not just a mere acknowledgment of the variety that exists but a conscious effort to appreciate and learn from the unique qualities that each individual and community brings to the table.

The theme for the board decoration for December was Celebrating Differences. All the Houses were required to do up their boards on the topic. Here are the glimpses of all the four houses Gandhi, Kabir, Nanak, and Tulsi.

Gandhi House

Strength lies in differences and not in similarities.

Gandhi house students represented our National Bird-Peacock and used hand cutouts to show the feathers. The idea was to show that even the fingers of a hand are different in size, shape, and orientation. That makes each of them unique and helps us to perform better. Similarly, there are so many difference that exist in society based on- cultural background, status, occupation, age, education, religious beliefs, gender, abilities, personal interests, family structure, physical appearances and life experiences etc. The border of the bulletin board was decorated with the strips representing four different seasons- spring, summer, rainy and autumn.

Our house tried to mention most of the differences and tried to express our thought "Respect All-Every Person Matters". We also used the lines of a trending Hindi song to catch the eye of all who pass by the board. The aim was to inculcate the aesthetic values and sense of appreciation in our students.

Kabir House

Learn to enjoy and respect each other's differences.

The caption of the board was depicting about our school's story.

Plethora of opportunities are given to our students to celebrate each activities / performances / event with full enthusiasm.

Various thoughts depicting how our children celebrating their differences such as:

- Playful Harmony: Play knows no boundaries.
- Learning in diversity, thriving in unity.
- It also displayed different adjectives to acknowledge diversity such as: develop, confidence, ideas, harmony, peace, build, and trust.
